Description

Based on a continuous loop, Chris Martin designed the wine rack in an unbroken line of wood, where the bottles rest firmly in milled-out compartments. Silo holds its bottles securely and in a horizontal position. The bottles have a 3.87 degree inclination to keep the wine in constant contact with the cork, something that stops the cork from drying out and spoiling the wine.

Silo is a wine rack that takes its name from containers and the friend of the Greek wine god, Silenus. The rack which has a typology taken from traditional wine cellars can store 4 bottles per unit and can be stacked up to four units high.
